The relative roles of sensory information and age in the formation of face categories. The acquisition of knowledge of the human face is dependent on numerous sensory cues. However, it is not known which types of sensory information are most important for the early formation of face categories. Using a dot-probe task with a new set of young children, we tested whether sensory information obtained in V2 and V4 could bias the formation of face categories and if early experience with faces was a prerequisite for the influence of V2 and V4. We found that V2 and V4 contribute to face-category learning. First, familiar faces and familiar morphs of familiar faces were more rapidly detected than novel faces and novel morphs of familiar faces. Second, when probes were presented in V2 and V4, the bias for familiar faces and morphs of familiar faces was reduced compared with that in a control location, and visual experience with faces was a prerequisite for this effect. The results indicate that face-category formation is not biased by V2 and V4 alone, but early experience with faces must occur for this category learning to take place. Our findings have implications for how we understand face recognition in infancy and may offer new insights into the neural basis of face-category formation in adults.

an application that enables you to play custom card games online with other users. In fact, this virtual tabletop support all kind of games that can be played in real life with friends. If you're looking for a game that's simple to use, you should think about card games since they can be played in less than 2 minutes. All you have to do in this application is install it, wait for the game to load and start playing. On the first screen of the application, you have to choose a game and then you will be taken to a second screen where you can continue adding decks to the game. Each deck consists of cards and they can be added in a deck editor. You can add custom decks by importing them from other files that are stored in your computer, share them and create a list of them. If you're ready, just choose any game and press the green start button located in the center. You can also chat with other users in the room where you're playing. There are even instructions on how to play in the tutorial section. You can receive prompts from other users in the room, either by typing something in the chat window or clicking on the button. At this point, you can perform basic functions, such as getting help with the game by asking other users for help, saving your game, chatting and saving the game. You'll know that you can do this if you see buttons for this in the upper right corner of the application. Some features can be found in the options menu, which allows you to enable or disable automatic deck changes, automatic
