Social Media & Twitter App Category: Social Networking Developed by: Available for: Windows Version: 1.0 Released: 14.11.2015 Size: 1.4 MB License: GNU GPL Twitter is a microblogging service where users are able to post tweets, status messages of up to 140 characters in length. On Twitter, users can also read and reply to the tweets of their followers. A tweet can be sent either by a Twitter user, a Twitter application or Twitter's web service. In addition to tweets, users can send other content from their applications. Applications often have access to a user's Twitter account, such as information about the user's friends and the account's followers. Tweets are displayed on a user's home page, which also shows the user's "popular tweets". Twitter was founded in 2006 by Jack Dorsey, Evan Williams and Biz Stone. Initially, Twitter focused on providing small, real-time information updates. As of October 2010, more than 200 million tweets are sent every day. A tweet is a 140-character post that appears in a user's "twitter stream". Users can follow other Twitter users, who they deem interesting or relevant, through their Twitter account. Following a user means the user will receive any updates the user sends. On Twitter, every post can be replied to and is therefore considered a conversation between the sender and the receiver, or tweeter and the tweeter. Some Twitter users, known as "tweeters", can submit "tweets" consisting of more than 140 characters. Typically, such tweets are news or messages of more than 140 characters. In addition to postings to Twitter, a user may send a tweet from another application. Such messages are called "application tweets" or "extended tweets". Applications can be mobile applications, web applications or mobile web applications. Twitter also allows developers to create third-party applications that run on the Twitter platform. Developers use the Twitter REST API to build applications that interact with Twitter. Twitter allows users to create applications, or widgets, to display tweets, such as the Tweetbot Twitter application. A user can choose to "follow" other users on Twitter. This means that the user will receive updates from them. Following a user, or to be followed, is often accomplished through the Twitter iPhone and iPad apps. A user's followers are listed on his or her profile page, where they can be sorted by "most
