The effect of specific probiotic product on the ileal microflora and nutrient digestion was examined in dogs. On April 8, a concerned passerby called police about what he saw growing in a flower bed, according to a report by Baltimore police. The responding officer was able to talk to the family and determined that the plot was actually a garden dedicated to their son, the Baltimore Sun reported. The family told the officer that they had only been in the area for a week and had no plans to be there for much longer, according to police. They were in the process of moving to another address. After a quick discussion, the family decided to just ignore the plants. Their first attempt at tolerance didn't go so well. "It was clear to me that they were trying to get rid of the plants," the officer's report said. "The plants were growing taller than the fence." The police officer could see a few seedlings in the plants, but there were lots of roots, which means they were already taking in nutrients from the soil. "The officer advised that these plants were not pot-bound," the officer's report said.
