In the last few month I have become greatly inspired by the Wilds of New Zealand, based out of The Auckland Game Designers Society, created and manned by some local Game Developer(s). These individuals represent a varied panel of people, varying from software development, to indie games and the Guild Wars 2 crowd.

After receiving the newsletter from Wilds, I posted something on Facebook about the exclusive New Zealand view on Unreal Tournament, with a link to a pictureson Flickr group which served as the inspiration for Intermixed with all this busy life, I found time for a few other things!

I managed to get drawn into the New Improved Beta last week, and jump on board. As I opened up the beta client again, I was pleased to see that the improved client was managed and made without my involvement?!

All of your previous content from the West was transferred over with no issue, and so now we have a massive clearing of Newbies level content! We have over about 400 new pieces of content for new players to discover,! I know this is a massive upgrade in content, and a very important update for the game.

central activity of propionic and oxipropionic acid on the concentration of neuroamines in the rat brain]. The effect of oxipropionic acid (OP) and propionic acid (PA) on brain catecholamines were studied. It has been established that OP (10, 20, 50 mg/kg) by the means of inhibiting the propionic acid metabolism reduces significantly dopamine concentration by approximately 60-80% while the norepinephrine content is unchanged. In PA (10, 20, 50 mg/kg) the trend is similar, dopamine level falls by 15-25%, the norepinephrine level remains unchanged. Both OP and PA induce the dopaminergic and adrenergic neurotoxic effects. In parallel to the biochemical studies the cytotoxic effect of OP and PA was evaluated by the application of the L-alanine-L-aspartate-L-alanine-phosphate buffer (PAP) method. The OP and PA per se is nontoxic to the cells, but after the application of PAP a sharp decrease of cell survival is observed. The cytotoxic effect of PA cannot be dissociated from the neurotoxic action. The neurocytotoxic action of PA is intensified in combination with the cytotoxic effect of OP. Both effects are independent from each other.

Buck Creek (Baltimore) Buck Creek is a tributary of the Patapsco River in Baltimore, Maryland. The creek runs through several neighborhoods in the northeast part of the city. The terrain of the Buck Creek catchment is a relatively undeveloped, barren plain and wetlands. These include a 19.5 acre meadow situated on the Patapsco River, which has been converted to the neighborhood of Youngstown, and a 41.2 acre remnant of the 19th Century Patapsco ship canal. Buck Creek was named after the Baltimore businessman George Buck, whose family settled in Maryland in the 17th Century. The creek is fed by water from Chesapeake Bay as well as the Patapsco River.
